16 United States v. Gaw, et al. (07-1242);
17 United States v. Adams, et al. (07-1323);

United States v. Volz, et al. (07-1396);
Clayton, et al. v. AT&T Communications of the Southwest, Inc., et al. (07-1187)

Courtroom: 6, 17th Floor
Judge: Hon. Vaughn R. Walker
Hearing: March 26, 2009

19
20 On December 23, 2008, United States filed an eight-page motion for summary judgment
21 in the above-captioned state cases pursuant to Section 803 of the FISA Amendments Act, 50
22 U.S.C. § 1885b. Section 803 is an express preemption statute enacted by Congress to 23 specifically preclude state attempts to investigate the alleged intelligence activities of the United
24 States, through, among other things, state demands for the disclosures of certain information
25 from Electronic Communication Service Providers. It is clearly applicable here.

26 The United States contacted counsel in the state cases in an attempt to agree upon a
27 modified schedule for briefing and a hearing on this motion.¹ The United States proposed that

28
¹ Because the first available motion date for the Court was in late-March, the ordinary operation of Local Rule 7 would have given the states nearly three months to oppose the eight-

1 the states respond to the motion by mid-February with the United States reply due in mid-March.
2 The states refused and instead advised they would seek to put off the United States' motion
3 entirely through the instant administrative motion. The states' motion is meritless and should be
4 denied. The Government requests that the Court enter the briefing schedule set forth below.

5 The only basis cited by the states for their refusal to brief the issues related to Section 803
6 is that a separate matter is now sub judice—i.e., whether Section 802 of the FAA requires
7 dismissal of claims against electronic communication service providers brought by private
8 litigants. A delay in the state cases to await the outcome of that question would be unwarranted.
9 Sections 802 and 803 of the FAA serve different purposes and operate independently from one
10 another. Indeed, regardless of how the Court rules with respect to Section 802, Section 803
11 would still operate to preempt the state authority at issue and would require entry of judgment for 12 the United States in these cases. The States have identified no reason to halt briefing on the 13 United States' motion in light of the Section 802 issue now under submission.²

14 Accordingly, the states' administrative motion should be denied, and the United States
15 requests that the court enter the following schedule for consideration of its motion

16 February 18, 2009: Consolidated Brief of the States in response to United States' Summary
17 Judgment Motion under Section 803;

18 March 4, 2009: Consolidated Brief of the Telecommunication Carrier Defendants in 19 Response to the Motion and Opposition of the Federal and State Parties

20 March 18, 2009: United States' Reply in Support of Its Motion under Section 803

21 April 1, 2009: Hearing on the United States' Motion under Section 803 (this hearing date
22 has been set by the Court previously)

23 CONCLUSION

24 For the foregoing reasons, the Court should deny the administrative motion to defer

26
27 page motion and then given the United States seven days to reply.

28 ² Even if Section 802 had any bearing on resolution of the state cases under Section 803,
that matter could be addressed through supplemental briefing after the Court ruled on Section
802 without delaying the motion on Section 803 preemption.

1 briefing on the United States' motion for summary judgment in the state cases and enter the
2 foregoing briefing schedule.
